Everybody In The Act

Jimmy Durante says "Evvabuddy wants to get into da act" and the expression fits the effort to lower the tolls on the Mackinac Bridge.

The recent election compaign brought the latest round of promises to make the crossing easier on the motorist's purse. Governor Romney named a committee to study toll reduction and the Democrats, who now control the Legislature, also named a committee of their own to see to it that if there's a way to squeeze down the tolls the Party of Jefferson gets credit for it.

How come that if evvabuddy wants the tolls reduced from their present high point of $3.75 (only the Chesapeake Bay bridge-tunnel which opened last April has a higher toll in the whole world) that they aren't reduced?

It's a long story that started with the difficulties of getting the bridge built in the first place. It couldn't be sold to the voters of Michigan as a state highway obligation to be paid for with taxes and opened toll free to travelers. So it was sold as a mixed private-government venture with the state putting in some $400,000 a year in highway funds for maintenance and private investors putting up $100 million to build the bridge. They'll be paid back with bridge tolls.

Lawrence Rubin, executive-secretary of the Mackinac Bridge Authority, told the U. P. Association of Supervisors about the present and factual prospects for reducing bridge tolls at their annual meeting in Escanaba. Rubin's version is informed and realistic. It isn't as bright as the promises of the politicians, but is the best indication of possibility of action that the public

Rubin points out that the Houghton-Hancock bridge which cost the state $10 million is toll free and the new Rouge River bridge which is costing more than $30 million will be toll free and that much more than $100 million of state highway bridges in Michigan are toll free. So why shouldn't the Mackinac Bridge be toll free? But this is the backward look in the rear view mirror at past events, not future prospects.

Dinner Dance Gala Affair

A fantasy of glitter and lights added atmosphere Saturday as the Newcomers Club opened the holiday season with their annual dinner dance at the Dells Supper Club.

Nearly 200 Newcomers and their guests enjoyed the festivities which opened with a cocktail hour at 6:30. A buffet dinner was served by candle-

Table centerpieces, made by Mrs. Joseph Weatherby and her decorations committee, included gilded pine cone trees, candles and Santa Claus holding individual name tags at the head table.

Mrs. Richard Rinehart, club president, introduced members of the dinner dance committee: Mrs. Donald Fitch and Mrs. Raymond Hockstad, co-chairmen; Mrs. Thomas Bintliff, publicity, Mrs. Robert Lorey, tickets and Mrs. Weatherby, decorations. New and outgoing officers were also recognized.

Richard Rinehart served as toastmaster for the evening Water Resources and entertained with an original parody of Edgar Allen Is League Topic Poe's "The Raven". The poem was in tribute to Mrs. Michael (Nora) Jensen, Welcome Wag- ter in this country, the League on hostess, and to all New-
